Owing to the extreme heat, most of the vaudeville houses in this vicinity are closing for the rest of July and August. The better class of actors are on their vacation at this time and rather than run the inferior acts we have decided to discontinue vaudeville until the last of August.

We will continue to run a first-class program of pictures, 3,000 feet in all, the admission being reduced to five cents. The hours of performance will be 2 p. m. to 5 p. m. and 7 p. m. to 10 p. m. During the summer there will be several changes in the theatre, which will make it much better. We are also booking some of the best vaudeville acts on the stage for the cooler days. Patrons can be assured of seeing a first-class picture show during the summer months at the small admission of five cents.

Two Thousand Foot Feature at Dreamland—"The Toll of Fear" (Lubin). "The Toll of Fear," a two reel picture, written, produced and played by Romaine Fielding, the star of the Lubin company, stationed at Nogales, Ariz., is probably one of the most strange and thrilling photoplays that the firm has ever released. The episode is a veritable reproduction of a circumstance that occurred on the Mexican border, the truth of which is vouched for by local authorities. One of the strange features of the story is that it is told by one man only, Fielding playing the dual role of the two brothers who figured in the tragedy.

Dick McKnight, a deputy sheriff of Santa Cruz county, Ariz., receives a telephone message from Sheriff Wheeler, of the adjacent county, to the effect that Pedro Aquilla and his band of cattle rustlers and outlaws are in San Luis canyon. His brother, Bill McKnight, the sheriff, being away, the young deputy determines to go out alone and corral some of the gang. He leaves a note to that effect for his brother and starts upon his mission. After getting into the mountains he runs across a note fastened to a tree, which reads: "Go back or you will die with the sun."
